 Hatin' On...

Many folks around these parts have heard of a local pop-punk band fronted by the gorgeous and talented Liz Bramlett called Panic Manor. Panic has unfortunately disbanded, but Liz is still making her name and her soaring voice heard by many adoring fans under her new moniker PIXEL ADAMS. For those not familiar with the etymology, Pixel represents, in her own words, "forward thinking and progressive," and Adams represents something "classic, timeless." Her music certainly expresses movements from both ideas, like a gameboy powered by a water wheel or a parchment with a touchscreen. Keep a look out for her debut album and catch her during the Festivus of Bands Saturday Dec. 13th at Sky City.

I've heard hints that you were in a few of the local bands here, would you mind discussing that?

I mostly just recorded music alone or with a few others. The only real band I was in was called Non-Alignment Pact. I think the most memorable show we ever played was at Studio B in Greenville, SC. We played the same night that Gaadalacanal Diary was doing a show at Furman and they didn't want us to start until they were done. Problem was we got there really early and the bartender kept refilling my mug of Guinness draft. I think we played one actual song and pretty much made up the rest. People loved it.

Need some ideas for Christmas presents? Although Cavalry Comics may seem tucked away off of exit 194 on I-20, it is definitely worth the trip. The shop offers a plethora of vintage comics and collectibles, including action figures. They will also buy your old comics or action figures for cash or store credit. The bins of $1 comics lining the entire left side of the store make it more than worth your while.

Looking at the current Augusta scene, what do you think we can all do to keep it growing?

I think we have a great art scene here. The artists here are so diverse and talented. The only problem really is that the business end could be a bit better. We're always trying to find new ways to present art to the public. Things like Art Bomba are really fun to do and it lets people see how art is made. I hope it will inspire other folks to make art as well!

What direction are you looking to go with your art next?

Lately it seems to be going in a primitive/modern direction if that makes any sense. I try not to think about it to much really. The best things seem to come from that approach.

How can we find your work, and where do you plan to show next?

I have a website that is currently being retooled, (mojogoat.com) but it will point you to my Facebook page. Right now I have pieces at the $100 Art show @ Artist's Local 1155, the current group show at Sky City, and a few at Oddfellows Gallery.

What happened to Thanksgiving Day? It used to be that you would wake up in the morning and watch the Parade, while waiting for all the food to be prepared. Stuff your face with too much food and be miserable napping and watching football until slipping into a food coma.

Unfortunately, those days are long gone. You see, there is no Thanksgiving Day anymore, it's just Thanksgiving dinner now. Black Friday has taken over one of our greatest holidays. Stores now open in the evening on Thanksgiving, which is ridiculous. Thanksgiving is supposed to be about gathering with family to eat and share all of the things you're thankful for. Now, Thanksgiving is grabbing a quick meal and getting a gang together so that you don't get your ass beat over a TV. Every year someone gets shot or trampled on Black Friday, and for what? To save a couple bucks.

Thanksgiving and Christmas should be the two holidays that everyone gets a day off, NOT to go shopping, but to be around friends and family and enjoy each other's company. Raining blows upon someone's head because they got the last TV is not the answer. I really hate it for the people that have to work on Thanksgiving; the people making the decisions are probably taking a week off so that they can go to their beach house while everyone else deals with the hell that is Black Friday. Let's just go back to stuffing our faces for Thanksgiving and leave the commercialization to Christmas. That is what I would be thankful for.
